Early User Feedback (remimazolam & angiotensin II )

---

“ Anyone capable of sedating patients with midazolam can sedate patients with remimazolam. ”

---

“ Real fast recovery, patient already awake before arriving at the recovery. ”

---

---

“ I just love sedating with remimazolam. It is easy to use, and patients are awake and able to take in information immediately after waking up. ”

---

“ We need to position (angiotensin II) after epinephrine. We should stop increasing the dose of epinephrine and switch quicker to second line options. ”

---

Target Audience: Physicians

---

The sedation experts: anaesthesiologists

- Safety oriented & specialist skillset and on hand for when emergencies occur to stabilize patient
  - Key for uptake of new sedative, which will only happen with their endorsement
  - Formulary discussions: Crucial in championing remimazolam, very positive to remimazolam

The procedural experts: gastroenterologists

- Though many other proceduralists exist, gastros will be key to engage with given where our data is focused
- Focused on successful completion of procedure
- Autonomy of sedative administration, a more difficult customer to engage

Other Key Stakeholders

Specialist Nurses

- Key part of the multidisciplinary team
- In certain centres responsible for administering the sedative
- May be involved in preparing the solution before administration

Hospital Pharmacists

- Important decision makers in getting remimazolam onto a hospital formulary
- Concentrating on managing trial usage given cost differential versus generic products

High-Level Payers

- Key stakeholder to engage with at launch to ensure access to remimazolam in hospitals and regional formularies
- Different structure in each country
